Transfer your data to your new iPhone 6/7/8/10Media for children: How to improve health conditions for vulnerable groups and children's quality of life through maternal and child health education: A systematic review. Public health and developmental science promote the concept of health through two ways: changing the healthcare environment and changing the individual's way of thinking and living. This phenomenon occurs differently among vulnerable groups such as children and their mothers. The objective of this review is to determine the effects of media on maternal and child health in the literature. A search was conducted in the databases SCOPUS, PubMed, Lilacs and Cochrane to identify articles published from 2000 to 2010. The following keywords and descriptors were used: media, children, development, maternal, infant, and child health. Twenty-eight articles were selected, of which 16 presented good methodological quality (e.g. randomized control trial and controlled clinical trial) and 12 were the best evidence level. The evidence level was determined according to the document evaluation of the evaluation of the PEDro criteria. It
